Agm battery tender harbor freight

12-18-2008, 05:01 #1 Hello - I have this float from Harbor Freight: Search In the manual, says This floating charger is designed to support flooded or lead-acid batteries WARNING: Do not use agm-type batteries. This charger supports batteries with a rated power of 5 to 125 amps/hour. Max charge of 13.2 VDC. What's going on? Does anyone use these port cargo alloy charges on AGM batteries? I find it hard to believe it won't be good, but it says not to use for AGM batteries. Thanks for all the information! -D- 12-18-2008, 18:03 #2 buy very cheap tools in Harbor Care... They work well. When they break, I buy more. However, a float charger is something for me that remains plugged into the garage all winter, connected to a battery Automatically. I've seen firsthand what happens to batteries when they're charged. Everything from lead to hra... They are still very accessible. Its simple basic float chain monitor, which keeps the voltage up with a small jet, cuts off. The main purpose of this is to prevent sulfation in cells. 12-18-2008, 8:49 p.m. #4 For me as a chance and burning the place is not worth the little $s would save. I'm using six of these right now. (on PWC, ATV, Bicycle.) Also model Plus on my cargo amp;sr=8-1 12-18-2008, 21:45 #5 I will buy their hand tools and hydraulics, but their electronics are the scariest! Hell, they've seized on their watch fuses sometimes they have branded things like Wolo and it's good, but steer clear the Chicago electric (house brand) but the buyer be cautious! everything they sell! 12-18-2008, 21:47 #6 in other words! +1 Originally published as DrewNJ I buy a lot of cheap tools at Harbor Freight... I find it hard to believe it won't be good, but it says not to use for AGM batteries. Thanks for all the information! - You really answered your own question. If you spent the money on an AGM battery, you need to finish the job... and get a charger/battery support that meets your specific AGM needs! The AGM battery I took from Sears recommended this cheap charger: use it for all my battery needs... trucks, PWC and boats. 12-18-2008, 10:17 a.m. #9 They're doing a new battery auction that has 6 chargers in it now. I saw a Speedvision ad this week. 12-19-2008, 13:09 #10 Originally published by ZMANN I'll buy hand tools and hydraulics, but their electronics are scary at best! I agree with the electronic stuff. Wallace World has already seen him, you've said enough there. Things from C.E., some aren't bad. Some of them have rearranged things from B&nd, just their seconds. I see a local selling some real-name items. That's a good thing. Originally published as RX951 They're doing a new battery auction that has six chargers on it now. I saw a Speedvision ad this week. That would be nice for me, except that my toys are everywhere and I keep the batteries in them. I use all of them' quick connections. The $24,000 and $6 is that it's still cheaper than what a 1- 6 bank unit should cost. I guess I should check it out. Keep the battery fully charged with this compact, comfortable float. The float charge/support provides a voltage that corresponds to the self-leveling battery speed of 12, keeping the battery clogged at all times without charging. Ideal for long-term car storage, 12 volts of spare batteries for machine pumps and other applications that require the battery to be fully charged between long periods of non-use.
